

Question 19 continued

- One doesn't need to know how food is prepared in a restaurant, you just need to know how to order.

APIs are important in modern businesses because they allow for efficiency, connectivity, automation and security

Question 20

An API key is a unique identifier that is used to authenticate software and systems attempting to access other softwares or systems

- APIs are mainly used for access control, usage tracking and billing

To store and protect an API key

- * Use secret management tools such as Google Cloud Secret Manager
- * Apply restrictions to specific services
- * Use environment variables on a server and access them via a code

If APIs ^{keys} are exposed to the public the effects are:-

- * Financial loss
- * Data breaches
- * Reputation damage